When it comes to brains, ravens rate up there with chimpanzees and dolphins. In captivity, these birds have been taught to talk better than some parrots. They also mimic other noises, like car engines, toilets flushing, and animal - and bird-calls.

Ravens have been known to imitate wolves or foxes to attract them to carcasses that the ravens can't break open themselves. When the wolf is finished, the ravens get the leftovers. Clever stuff!

Ravens have a soft side too. They have been known to play with toys and make friends with other ravens. They seem to be able to empathise when one of their pals is in distress.

Fill in the missing words. James 5:17-18 might help.
